The "-ed" ending typically signifies the past tense of regular verbs or the past participle form, which is used in perfect tenses. For example:

In addition to forming the past tense, "-ed" endings can also function as adjectives. For instance:

- Excite becomes excited (indicating enthusiasm)

The Basics of Ing Endings

The "-ing" ending is used to form present participles, which are often used in continuous tenses. For example:

- Run becomes running
- Read becomes reading
- Swim becomes swimming

Furthermore, "-ing" can also be used as an adjective. For example:

- Interest becomes interesting (indicating something that captures attention)
- Bore becomes boring (indicating something that lacks interest)
