The Origins of Fabergé Eggs

Peter Carl Fabergé was born in 1846 in St. Petersburg, Russia. He came from a family of jewelers, and after receiving his education in Europe, he took over his father's business. In 1885, Tsar Alexander III commissioned Fabergé to create a special Easter gift for his wife, Empress Maria Feodorovna. This marked the beginning of the famed Fabergé egg tradition.

The First Imperial Egg

The first egg, known as the "Imperial Egg," was crafted from gold and enameled in white and gold colors. It opened to reveal a golden yolk, which held a miniature hen made of gold and diamonds. This egg set the standard for future creations, and the tradition continued for over three decades.
