Overview of Harding, Coolidge, Hoover, and Roosevelt

The presidencies of Warren G. Harding, Calvin Coolidge, Herbert Hoover, and Franklin D. Roosevelt represent a transformative period in American history, spanning from 1921 to 1945. Each president faced unique challenges and had varying approaches to governance, reflecting the political and economic climate of their times.

Warren G. Harding (1921-1923)

Harding's presidency was marked by a return to normalcy after World War I. He advocated for pro-business policies and aimed to reduce the federal government's role in the economy. However, his administration was marred by scandals such as the Teapot Dome scandal, which involved bribery and corruption at high levels of government.

Calvin Coolidge (1923-1929)

Following Harding's death, Coolidge assumed the presidency and continued many of Harding's policies. Known for his laconic style and belief in limited government, Coolidge promoted economic prosperity, which led to the Roaring Twenties. His administration focused on tax cuts and reducing government spending, which contributed to economic growth during this period.

Herbert Hoover (1929-1933)

Herbert Hoover took office just before the Great Depression, and his presidency was defined by his attempts to combat the economic downturn. Initially, he believed in voluntary measures and limited government intervention, but as the depression deepened, his policies became increasingly criticized. His administration struggled to provide adequate relief to the millions affected by unemployment and poverty.

Franklin D. Roosevelt (1933-1945)

Roosevelt's presidency marked a significant shift in American policy with the introduction of the New Deal, a series of programs aimed at economic recovery and social reform. His leadership during the Great Depression and World War II established him as one of the most impactful presidents in U.S. history. Roosevelt's policies expanded the role of the federal government and provided direct assistance to those in need.
