Understanding Headaches

Headaches are one of the most common medical complaints, affecting millions of people worldwide. They can be categorized into several types, with the most prevalent being tension-type headaches, migraines, and cluster headaches. Understanding the differences between these types is crucial for effective management.

Tension-Type Headaches

Tension-type headaches are often characterized by a dull, aching sensation all over the head. They may also include tenderness in the scalp, neck, and shoulder muscles. Stress, anxiety, and poor posture are common contributors to this type of headache.

Migraine Headaches

Migraine headaches are typically more severe than tension-type headaches and may be accompanied by nausea, vomiting, and sensitivity to light and sound. They are often triggered by specific stimuli, such as certain foods, hormonal changes, or environmental factors.

Cluster Headaches

Cluster headaches are rare but extremely painful, often occurring in cycles or clusters. They lead to intense pain on one side of the head, typically around the eye, and can last from 15 minutes to several hours. The exact cause of cluster headaches is still under investigation.
