Founding of Alpha Kappa Alpha

The founding of Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Incorporated, is a pivotal moment in the history of African American women's organizations. The sorority was established on January 15, 1908, by a group of nine visionary students at Howard University, who sought to create a support network for Black women pursuing higher education. The founders, known as the "Nine Jewels," were Ethel Hedgeman Lyle, Beulah Burke, Lillie Burke, Marjorie Hill, Margaret Flagg Holmes, Anna Easter Brown, Lucy Diggs Slowe, Marie Woolfolk Taylor, and Nellie Quander.

These women recognized the need for a sisterhood that would not only support its members academically and socially but also empower them to advocate for social justice and community service. The initial meeting took place in the basement of a dormitory, where they established the sorority's values of sisterhood, scholarship, and service. The organization's first president, Ethel Hedgeman Lyle, played a significant role in shaping its mission and vision, ensuring that the principles of charity and community engagement were embedded in the sorority's foundation.

Milestones in History

Since its inception, Alpha Kappa Alpha has reached several significant milestones that have marked its growth and development. The sorority expanded rapidly; by 1913, the first chapter outside of Howard University was established at the University of Chicago. This expansion paved the way for the creation of additional chapters across the United States and eventually internationally.

In 1918, Alpha Kappa Alpha became the first sorority to be incorporated, a critical move that provided legal recognition and stability. Throughout the decades, the sorority has adapted to the changing social landscape while remaining committed to its founding principles. During the civil rights movement, members actively participated in campaigns advocating for equality, often working alongside prominent civil rights leaders.
