The history of politics in Pakistan is a rich tapestry woven with the threads of colonial legacy, independence struggles, military interventions, and democratic movements. Since its inception in 1947, Pakistan has experienced a myriad of political shifts, each marked by unique challenges and developments. This article explores the evolution of political structures, key events, and influential figures that have shaped the political landscape of Pakistan over the decades.

Colonial Legacy and the Birth of Pakistan

The roots of Pakistan's political history can be traced back to the British colonial rule in the Indian subcontinent. The British administration established a centralized governance structure, which significantly influenced the political dynamics in the region. The demand for a separate nation for Muslims emerged in the early 20th century, primarily led by the All-India Muslim League under the leadership of Muhammad Ali Jinnah.

1. Two-Nation Theory: This concept, articulated by Sir Syed Ahmed Khan and later popularized by Jinnah, argued that Hindus and Muslims were distinct nations, with their own customs, religion, and traditions. It laid the foundation for the demand for Pakistan.
2. Role of the Muslim League: The Muslim League, formed in 1906, became the principal political party advocating for Muslim rights. Its demand for a separate state gained momentum during the Lahore Resolution of 1940, which formally called for independent states for Muslims in the northwest and east of India.

The culmination of these efforts led to the partition of British India in August 1947, resulting in the creation of Pakistan. However, this partition was marred by violence, communal riots, and mass migrations, leaving a significant mark on the nascent state.
