Background of the Perron Family

In the early 1970s, Roger and Carolyn Perron, along with their five daughters, moved into a sprawling farmhouse that dates back to the late 18th century. The property, known as the Old Arnold Estate, had a rich history, having seen several owners and numerous tragic events throughout its existence. The Perron family was excited about their new home, but they soon discovered that they were not alone.

Initial Experiences

Shortly after moving in, the Perrons began to experience strange occurrences, including:

The Haunting Unfolds

As time progressed, the haunting experiences intensified. The Perrons would often feel a sense of dread when entering specific rooms, particularly the basement and the master bedroom.

Interactions with Spirits

Throughout their time in the house, the Perrons encountered various spirits, some benign and others malevolent. Notable spirits included:

The family sought to understand these entities and often attempted to communicate with them, leading to both frightening and enlightening revelations about the house's past.

Seeking Help

As the haunting grew more intense, the Perrons decided to seek help from paranormal investigators. They reached out to Ed and Lorraine Warren, renowned demonologists who had a history of investigating supernatural phenomena.

The Warrens' Involvement

Ed and Lorraine Warren visited the Perron home and quickly recognized the seriousness of the situation. The couple conducted several investigations, documenting their findings and attempting to communicate with the spirits. Their involvement provided the Perrons with both guidance and support.

During their investigations, the Warrens uncovered disturbing information about Bathsheba Sherman and her connection to the house. They believed that she was not only haunting the property but also trying to exert her influence over the family, particularly Carolyn, who became increasingly affected by the malevolent forces.
