Understanding Human Design

Human design is a comprehensive system that seeks to map out a person's energetic blueprint. It combines various disciplines to create a unique profile based on an individual's birth data. This profile highlights key aspects of personality, decision-making strategies, and overall life purpose.

The Components of Human Design

1. Energy Types: There are four main energy types in human design—Manifestors, Generators, Projectors, and Reflectors. Each type has its own way of interacting with the world and making decisions.
2. Centers: The chart consists of nine centers that represent different functions, such as communication, intuition, and emotions. These can be defined (consistent energy) or undefined (variable energy).
3. Profile: The profile is a combination of numbers that gives insight into a person's personality traits and behavioral patterns.

4. Authority: This aspect indicates the most reliable way for an individual to make decisions based on their design type.
