Rhys uses the character of Antoinette Cosway to explore the intersection of race, class, and gender.

- Antoinette's Struggle: Antoinette is a white Creole girl caught between two worlds—neither fully accepted by the black Jamaican community nor by the British expatriates. Her identity is fluid, shaped by her environment and the societal expectations placed upon her.

Gender and Feminism

Rhys' portrayal of female characters provides a critical commentary on gender roles and the oppression of women in both Caribbean and European contexts.

Readers witness Antoinette's descent into madness through the eyes of both herself and Rochester, highlighting the misunderstandings and cultural clashes that contribute to her tragic fate.
